Description:

Summary:

This farmstead comprises a main complex of buildings with an unoccupied farmhouse, and a separate tenant house that is much altered but is currently occupied. The main, derelict farmhouse is a two story frame building. Two unused outbuildings, one frame and one stone, stand nearby. A frame barn is in use on the farm.

This farmstead comprises a main complex of buildings with an unoccupied farmhouse, and a separate tenant house that is much altered but is currently occupied. The main, derelict farmhouse is a two story frame building that faces west. The three bay long by two bay deep structure features a central entrance sheltered by an across-the-front porch. An interior brick chimney is located at either gable end. A two story two bay ell followed by a one story section extends to the rear.

The building's roof is covered with metal. The house is sheathed in German siding. Although the windows are boarded up with plywood, pedimented architraves are visible. Tapered round columns support the porch roof.

Two one story outbuildings are located southeast of the house. The frame building, a summer kitchen is covered in German siding. The stone outbuilding no longer has a roof. A frame bank barn, still used on the farm, is located to the south.

The tenant house is located east of the main complex. This two story three bay structure is covered with aluminum siding and appears to be much altered.

Figure 1 consists of a 3x3 grid of plots. Each plot has a vertical axis labeled 'F' (representing the number of fish) and a horizontal axis labeled with 'Zone', 'Easting', or 'Northing'. The plots show different patterns of fish distribution across the zones. For example, the top-left plot shows a single bar for 'Zone', while the bottom-right plot shows multiple bars for 'Northing'.

Three empty bar charts are provided for data entry. The first chart is labeled 'Zone' and has a vertical axis labeled 'H'. The second chart is labeled 'Easting' and the third is labeled 'Northing'. Each chart has a horizontal axis with 10 tick marks and a vertical axis with 10 tick marks.
